In 1858 John Macfarlane reported the following sad incident to the Baptist Home Missionary Society for Scotland:

"A melancholy accident took place here on 30th April. A brother of mine, with three other men, were drowned while fishing about two miles from land. A violent gale from the north drove them out to the Atlantic Ocean, and they have not been heard of since. My brother was examined for baptism on 28th April, and gave great satisfaction, but on the 30th God saw fit to call him home."

(This would be William, named in the 1851 Census as 'Alexander' and known to his family, in the Gaelic, as 'Alasdair')
